

Beat that, RapidKL

Written by straits-mongrel

Wednesday, 10 February 2010 23:53 - Last Updated Thursday, 11 February 2010 11:42

---

So what if that's a hand-painted sign on the body. Aging public buses such as the one above continue to ply the small towns of Perak, providing a much-needed service to the community. They may be old, their engines in constant chatter amidst the steel and grease, but they are proud workhorses - the tyres are scrubbed black and the paintwork brilliant. Many good miles remain ahead before they are rested.

The above shot was taken in Beruas, a town with a single main street about 40km southwest of Ipoh.

