

Saya Anak Bangsa Malaysia will be bringing its Roadshow to Sabah and Sarawak on March 13 and 14 . While many Malaysians may have traveled to the main cities or hung out at exquisite dive spots, the interiors of these territories remain largely an enigma.

DHANEN MAHES

, as Semenanjung as they come, had a chance to delve deeper while doing voluntary work some months ago. He shares with us his experience

I peeked into the further reaches of the Hornbill's nest not so very long ago. The mountains are more jagged, carpeted in a thousand shades of green. The rivers are mighty; a kind of whitewater restlessness carving away layers of time from their banks. The people are gentle. Gentle as the mengkuang baskets they weave.

Deep in the heart of Sarawak, Malaysia. The image shows a rural scene with wooden buildings and a tall antenna pole under a bright, cloudy sky. The sun is visible, creating a strong lens flare effect.

Deep in the heart of Sarawak, a group of people are walking along a dirt path. The path is surrounded by lush green vegetation and trees. In the background, there are some wooden structures and a group of people standing near a fence. The scene is captured in a candid, documentary style.

Edna and her family are now living in a small, simple house. She is still a young girl, but she is growing up. She is still a young girl, but she is growing up. She is still a young girl, but she is growing up. This little

We were the first of our kind in the village. We started that same night, and this

During the morning, the village is quiet, and the people are busy with their daily work. The houses are built on stilts, and the people are wearing traditional clothing. The hills in the background are covered in dense forest, and the air is fresh and cool.

Since the first Sarawak WWI and the second world war, Sarawak has been a part of the British Empire, and then to the new independent Sarawak. The Sarawak government has been a part of the British Empire, and then to the new independent Sarawak.
